

U.P.C.

Urban Performance Collective

Originality is everything.

Gorilla Tango Theatre

March 10, 2009

It's hard to browse the Chicago performance listings each week and NOT find at least two shows running at Gorilla Tango Theatre in Bucktown. This intimate space is a bit raw, but such an asset to the independent theatre community in Chicago. It's SO easy to see a show here, the tickets are reasonably priced, and it has a really casual, cool-kid vibe. I saw a show here a while back and

I can't think of any theatre where me and my friends can drink a six pack while watching the show (seriously)!

For those of you that don't know: "Gorilla Tango Theatre is a live theatrical venue where audiences can consistently go each week to see a wide variety of performances by a diverse group of talented producers, directors, actors, writers, etc. They exist to provide artists and organizations of all sizes and genres the opportunity to produce their work in a professional environment."

They are ALWAYS seeking producers, so if you have a show you're trying to get on stage visit their website for more information.

Showing this week:

Jaime's Dance Studio: An improv dance comedy....sounds interesting

Afflictions: Elizabeth Nonie's drama "tells the story of a young man's disobedience and how his choices initiated a change in his behavior and life."

Brick Wall: New comedy about a pair of middle-aged brothers

Cool Party Cool Space: Sketch comedy

So, if you want a casual night of affordable performance, definitely head to Gorilla Tango. To learn more about tickets and pricing, visit their website!

They are located just off the Western Blue Line at 1919 W Milwaukee (Western and Milwaukee) in Bucktown.

Posted by brittanysteiger

Filed in Arts, Arts Business, Chicago, Entertainment, Gorilla Tango Theatre, Recommendations, Theatre, Uncategorized · Tags: Arts, Chicago, Entertainment, performing arts, Theatre

Leave a Comment »